Did this story resonate with you? Which character did you identify with most? Why?

At one point in the story, the character Adam Sinclair tells Katie, "We all have things that come back to haunt us. Some of us just see them more clearly than others." Discuss the ways in which the ghosts of the past come to haunt the present. Who do you feel ends up seeing the truth most clearly in the end?

It's been said that Jodi Picoult 'makes the political personal.' Do you agree? Is she making a political statement in Plain Truth? If so, what would you say is the political statement she is making with this book? What insight does it offer to our current political climate?
